

WORK/LIFE

From Move In to Move Out: A Full-Cycle Rental Guide for NYC

Making navigating renting an apartment in NYC a little easier

September 2026

- | | | | |
|----------|---|-----------|-------------------------------------|
| 1 | Overview | 12 | Moving into Your Apartment |
| 2 | Getting Started & Looking for an Apartment | | Finding movers |
| | Determine your budget, timeline, need | | Walk-ups vs. elevator buildings |
| | Important Attributes | | Notifying apartment of move in date |
| | When do I start? | | Move-in day |
| | Real Estate Agents/Brokers | | Resources |
| | Landlords and Buildings | 13 | Living in Your Apartment |
| | Concessions | | Rental furniture |
| | Sublets | | Apartment sharing |
| | Resources | | Subletting |
| 8 | Applying for an Apartment | | Maintenance |
| | Application | | Making changes |
| | Resources | | Lease renewal |
| 9 | Signing a Lease | | Resources |
| | What is a lease? | 16 | Moving out of Your Apartment |
| | What clauses should I look out for? | | Getting security deposit back |
| | Negotiating rent | | Breaking the lease |
| | Security deposits | | Buying a house |
| | Concession agreement | | Finding another apartment |
| | Renter's insurance | | Resources |
| | Signing a sublet agreement | | |
| | Resources | | |

Overview

In this guide, we will go through the full cycle of renting an apartment in NYC, from move in to move out beginning with Looking for an Apartment and ending with Moving out of Your Apartment. Feel free to jump to the sections that are most relevant to you right now. There will be resources in every section should you need them. If you have questions, want additional information, or want to schedule a private consultation, please reach out to the Office of Work/Life at worklife@columbia.edu.

Key Highlights

- Fast process – most apartments are available for move-in within 30 days.
- Determine the attributes most important to you – location, monthly rent, size of apartment, available light, and type of amenities.
- Usually it is faster and easier to use a real estate broker, but there are websites like StreetEasy that have “no fee” listings.
 - If you are currently affiliated with Columbia University and would like a referral to a real estate broker, contact the Office of Work/Life, Housing Information and Referral Service at worklife@columbia.edu.
- When viewing an apartment, be prepared to fill out an application. Have your documentation readily available in both electronic and hard copy form.
- Signing the lease can take as little as a day or two once your application has been approved. At lease signing, the first month's rent, security deposit of one month's rent, and broker's fees (if applicable) are paid.

Required Documentation

- Employment or offer letter
- Last year's tax return
- Verification of other income (if needed)
- Bank statements verifying funds
- Names and contact information of previous landlords
- Personal and business reference letters
- Photo identification (driver's license, passport, etc.)

Required Funds and Credit Verification

- A full credit check will be conducted
- An application fee of $20-$100 is required
- First month's rent
- Security deposit
- Broker's fees (if applicable)

Important Terminology

- Condos and Co-op Buildings: Apartments are individually owned. The buildings will have rules about how the apartments can be rented. (See page 6 for more definitions)
- Guarantors: If you do not meet the landlord's requirements, either a company or a personal guarantor can guarantee the lease on your behalf. (See pages 9-10)
- Broker's Fees: A licensed realtor will charge a fee to help find an apartment. (See page 4)

Disclaimer

The content in this document is provided for informational purposes only. It is not intended to provide legal advice and should not substitute for the advice of an experienced real estate attorney. Also, the links and references to web sites and organizations are provided for informational purposes only. Columbia University does not endorse any specific organization, website, or real estate professional and does not suggest that one source should be utilized to the exclusion of another.

Getting Started & Looking for an Apartment

Determine your budget, timeline, and need

In order to begin the process of finding an apartment, you should first assess your financial standing. Specifically, your income/budget and credit score.

- As a base guideline, usually one's monthly rent should equal 25%-30% of one's gross monthly salary. Landlords usually require total gross annual household income to be 40 to 50 times the monthly rent. For example, if the monthly rent is $2,000, then one's gross annual income needs to be $80,000-$100,000.
- The starting position is that you have a stable job, good credit and an income that meets their requirements. A landlord wants a stable tenant who pays rent on time.
- If you don't already know your credit score, you can check your credit report on myFICO or Annual Credit Report. Both pull credit reports from all three agencies – Trans Union, Equifax and Experian.
- Since where you live is dependent on what you can afford, it is a good idea to understand apartment costs in different neighborhoods. One of the best websites for understanding the New York market is <https://streeteasy.com>. Since the website pools listings and information from many sources, it has a wide range of listings in different neighborhoods throughout the five boroughs of New York City.
- Renting an apartment directly from a landlord usually means the lease has a term of 12 or 24 months. The apartments are unfurnished, including light fixtures that are attached to the wall or ceiling, kitchen cabinets, and major appliances such as a refrigerator, stove and dishwasher. Some apartments include a washer and dryer, but usually only in new, luxury buildings or apartments that have been recently renovated.

Important Attributes (e.g., location, sunlight, quiet street, closet space)

Apartments in the New York City metropolitan area vary considerably in many ways, such as the age of the building, size of apartment, available light, and types of amenities. Buildings with more amenities usually come with more staff, and higher rent. Unless you have a large rent budget, you might need to decide what are the most important aspects of an apartment to you – location, size, natural light, quiet or little street noise, doorman, gym, roof deck, balcony, parking in the building, laundry room on-site, washer/dryer in unit, pet-friendly, etc. – as you probably can't afford to have it all (unfortunately).

- Pet friendly?
 - If you have a pet, your choices will be limited to pet-friendly buildings. Many landlords in Manhattan do not allow dogs, while some only allow cats. Some landlords allow only one dog, others allow only dogs of 20 pounds or less, while others set breed restrictions.
- Neighborhoods
 - There are several good neighborhood guides to help you determine if a certain neighborhood is where you would like to live. Explore the Office of Work/Life's Neighborhood Guides for information on housing, commuting, schools, demographics and more, as well as the following publicly-available guides:
 - Compass
 - Corcoran
 - StreetEasy

When do I start?

Begin the process of renting an apartment two to three months prior to your desired move date. This will give you time to understand the market and determine your budget, the size of apartment you need and can afford, and which neighborhoods appeal to you. However, apartments do not begin to appear on the market until 30 to 45 days prior to the start of the lease, and there are many apartments on the market that are available for immediate occupancy.

- The search for an apartment can take one day or one month. However, if you begin your search too early, you will find it difficult to see many apartments with your move-in date. Apartments in rental buildings tend to not come on the market more than 30 days prior to the expiration of the current tenant's lease, and many landlords will not list an apartment until the previous tenant has moved out.
 - The apartment is then available for immediate occupancy. The exception to this is rentals in co-op or condo buildings which tend to have a longer application process, as do properties in the suburbs.
 - It is best to start looking for an apartment 30 to 45 days before you want to move into a rental apartment, and at least 60 days before for a co-op or condo apartment or single-family house.
- The busiest months to search for an apartment are May through September, due to increased inventory as more people tend to move during the summer, and more people are looking for an apartment as well.
- If possible, go apartment hunting during the week when most people are working. If you see an apartment on Friday, it will probably not be available by Monday since Saturday and Sunday are when most people look for apartments. Also, the best apartments tend to be listed during the first two weeks of the month.
- Visit the apartment and the neighborhood during the day and at night, if possible. Some streets may be very busy during the day, but deserted at night, which may or may not feel comfortable. Walk the route you might normally take.
- When looking at apartments, it is best to have everyone who is part of the decision-making process with you – spouse, partner, roommate, parent, etc.

And as far as how to start, there are many ways to search for an apartment: word of mouth (make everyone you know aware that you are looking for an apartment), social media, walking around the area that you want to live, signing-up on the wait list for specific buildings, and/or contacting landlords, managing agents and real estate brokers directly.

Real Estate Agents/Brokers

Though you do not need to use a real estate broker to find an apartment, it is easiest to use one, particularly if you do not already live in the area. Many landlords, especially those who own less property, give the apartment listing to a broker, so the broker has the “exclusive.” The broker then shows the apartment, verifies the information on the application and conducts the credit check on behalf of the landlord.

If using a real estate broker, fees are typically between one month's rent and 12-15% of the annual rent (i.e. monthly rent=$3,000; annual rent=$36,000; 12% of annual rent=$4,320).

The Fairness in Apartment Rental Expenses \(FARE\) Act took effect on June 11, 2025. This law prohibits brokers who represent landlords from charging broker fees to tenants. This includes brokers who publish listings with the landlord's permission. Landlords or their agents must disclose other fees that the tenant must pay in their listings and rental agreements.

If a tenant independently hires a broker to assist with their apartment search, however, the tenant remains responsible for that broker's fees.

It is also possible to find an apartment without a broker. These are usually called “no fee” apartments, and there are a variety of ways of finding them:

- Put the word out to all your friends and colleagues that you are looking for an apartment, both verbally and through any social media that you normally use (email, Facebook, Twitter, etc.).

- Walk around the area in which you want to live – ask the doormen if any apartments are available in the building, respond to apartment signs posted on a building (not all buildings do this, but many do!).
- Contact managing agents and landlords directly. There are many websites that list “no fee” apartments, which usually means you are contacting the landlord or landlord’s representative directly. Since many of these websites are open to the public, there is the potential of scammers listing apartments. See page 7 for how to avoid a scam.

Brokers charge a commission for their services, which is usually a stated percentage of the first year’s rent (15% in Manhattan). The amount of the commission is not set by law and can be negotiated. The broker must assist the client in finding and obtaining an apartment before a commission may be charged. The fee should not be paid until the tenant has signed a lease for the apartment shown by that particular broker.

Here are 10 questions you can ask your real estate agent before hiring:

- Are you primarily a rental agent or a purchasing agent?
- In which neighborhood do you work?
- Will I be working only with you or are you part of a team?
- Do you work full-time or part-time as a real estate agent?
- How many other people are you helping find apartments right now?
- Is your license in good standing? (see first bullet point)
- How many years of experience do you have?
- What did you do before you became a real estate agent?
- How large is the office you work in, and does the size help you?
- Can you provide me with the names and phone numbers of clients who have agreed to be references?

If you are currently affiliated with Columbia University and would like a referral to a real estate broker, contact the Office of Work/Life, Housing Information and Referral Service, at worklife@columbia.edu.

Landlords and Buildings

In New York City, you will find that there are several kinds of rental buildings and units available. Some of these terms may sound unfamiliar, so we list them below:

Types of Buildings

Brownstone; Elevator building; Loft; Doorman; Luxury Doorman; Prewar; Postwar; and Walk-up

Types of Apartments

Studio; Alcove studio; Convertible, Flexible or Junior 4; Loft; One-bedroom; Two-bedroom; and Classic

Types of Rental Apartments

In addition to buildings that consist solely of rental apartments, there are opportunities for you to rent an apartment in co-operative and condominium buildings. The conditions attached to these types of leases are totally determined by the building and vary considerably.

- Rental buildings:
A rental building is owned by a landlord, and all of the apartments are available for rent. Tenants are protected by New York State law, though tenants in buildings consisting of fewer than six units have less protection.
- Condominiums (Condos):
The apartments are owned by individuals for residential or investment purposes. Within each condominium building’s guidelines, the owners are free to establish terms such as rent and length of lease. There will be application and move-in fees.

- Cooperatives (Co-ops):

A co-op is structured as a corporation. Rather than owning the apartment outright, individuals own shares in a corporation. In many co-op buildings, there are strict restrictions about renting an apartment, the length of the lease (typically two years maximum), and whether the tenant is allowed to have a roommate. Prospective tenants must submit extensive documentation to the co-op board, as well as interview them. The process can take one to two months. Also, the application and move-in fees can be quite steep.

- Rent-regulated apartments and affordable housing:

On New York City's Housing and Preservation Department website there are descriptions of different types of affordable and rent-regulated housing available in New York City.

- There is more information about affordable housing on our website.

- Rent-stabilized apartments:

Not many rent-stabilized apartments make it to the market these days, but if you think the apartment you want to rent, or have rented, should be rent-regulated or you want to confirm the status, you can:

- Get the rent history from the state via the NYS Division of Housing and Community Renewal.
- Approach your landlord, though it might be helpful to get help from a housing lawyer or tenant advocate.

When renting an apartment in any large urban environment, it can feel a bit anonymous and disconcerting. There are many questions one can ask, such as: Is the landlord reputable? Are there any violations in the building? Have there been noise complaints filed against other tenants? Many of these questions can be answered by accessing public records, and there are a number of websites that can make this easier:

- Check to see if there are any violations on the building and property registration by using the NYC Department of Housing Preservation and Development's (HPD) Building Registration and Violation Service.
- Check the Public Advocate's NYC's Worst Landlords Watch List.
- If you would prefer to access detailed information about crime statistics, then the NYPD Crime Statistics' website tabulates different types of crimes (robbery, murder, grand larceny, etc.) by the week and then the percentage change from the previous year. This is searchable by general area.
- A website that provides information about a particular address is Property Shark which lists ownership information, management contacts, title documents, property taxes, and other facts obtained from public records.
- On Street Easy, specific building information can be found, along with previous asking rents for apartments in the building.
- If you want to know if the apartment falls under rent stabilization, you can consult the NYC Rent Guidelines Board's website. Further information can be found at New York State-Homes and Community Renewal.
- Check Openigloo for tenant reviews about the building.
- Craig's List provides a list of some things to be aware of in order to avoid scams:
 - Deal locally, face-to-face, follow this one rule and avoid 99% of scam attempts.
 - Do not provide payment to anyone you have not met in person.
 - Never wire funds (e.g. Western Union) - anyone who asks you to is a scammer.
 - Don't accept cashier/certified checks or money orders - banks cash fakes, then hold you responsible.
 - Transactions are between users only - no third party provides a "guarantee".
 - Never give out financial info (bank account, social security, PayPal account, etc.).
 - Do not rent or purchase sight-unseen—that amazing "deal" may not exist.
 - Refuse background/credit checks until you have met the landlord/employer in person.
- And lastly – Google. You never know what might show up when you google the landlord, managing agent or building address.

Some other tips are to access the building's common areas. Are they well maintained? Get feedback from your broker, if you are using one, and try speaking to other tenants about their experiences with the landlord.

Concessions

If you are looking for an apartment during the winter, many landlords will give concessions such as a free month's rent or agree to pay your broker's fee (see page 4 regarding broker's fees). Though inventory is lower in the winter, so is the number of people looking for an apartment to rent. Most landlords would rather have the apartment rented than have it vacant and not have any rent paid at all.

Sublets

If your income does not meet the requirements for many market rate apartments, or you do not have a credit history, you might need to share an apartment or find a sublet. Many people new to New York start out with a share or sublet. Opportunities are usually abundant, financial requirements are not as stringent, and the cost is usually just the first month's rent and one month's rent as security deposit. Initially having something less permanent will allow you to get your bearings, take the time to look around and build up some credit history.

A short-term sublet can be quite useful if you are in between more permanent arrangements, such as transitioning from a rental to an apartment purchase. Sublets can last anywhere from one month (NYC does not allow sublets for less than 30 days) to several months. There is information regarding short-term accommodations in the Temporary Housing and Hotels section on our website.

- If you are looking for a sublet close to the Morningside, Manhattanville or CUIMC campuses Off-Campus Housing Assistance \(OCHA\) manages an online database of sublets, rooms to rent, and long-term apartment rentals (UNI required to log-in).
- There are many other websites that list available sublets, but another favorite is Sabbatical Homes as mostly academics list on this site.

Similar to finding "no fee" rentals, the best way to find an apartment to sublet in New York is to ask all your friends, post on social media, and get the message out in any way possible that you are looking to sublet an apartment. You never know who might know someone in New York that is leaving town for a few days, a few months, or longer.

- If that fails, then there are plenty of websites to consider.
 - Airbnb
 - HotPads
 - PadMapper
- Another option is to find a realtor that specializes in short-term leases.

Apartment checklist

- Is the rent reasonable for the neighborhood and size of apartment? The rent can be negotiated with a landlord, so understand the market before you start looking.
- What are the conditions of the apartment and building? Are there any signs of roaches or rodents?
- Is the apartment large enough to fit my furniture? Consider the floor plan regarding location of your furniture, TV and cable connection, windows, etc.
- Are all the appliances in good working order? Whenever possible, check plumbing, appliances, water pressure, type of heating, air conditioning, and electrical outlets.
- Check the closets, cabinets and storage space.
- Do the windows and doors open and close properly? Note locations of windows and exposures. If windows face a busy street, check the noise level with the windows open.
- Is all the plumbing in the bathroom and kitchen in good working order?

-
- What is the security system in the building – doorman, intercom?
 - Does the superintendent live on site? If not, ask about the number to call for repairs or in an emergency.
 - Is there an elevator? If not, are the stairs well-lit and clean?
 - Is there a laundry room in the building? If so, ask to see it.
 - What utilities are included in the rent?
 - Observe all aspects of the neighborhood – shopping, playgrounds, bus and subway stops, etc.

Resources

Should You Use a Broker to Find an NYC Rental?

Subletting laws

New York City Rent Guidelines Board

No fee apartments

Apartment Finder

GoNoFee.com

LeaseBreak.com

Listings Project

StreetEasy

Trulia

Zillow

Zumper

Applying for an Apartment

Application

When you have found an apartment you would like to rent, you will be asked to fill out a rental application and submit documents verifying your income and financial viability. The application is usually one page and states there will be a credit check, as well as verification of assets, references, checking account, employer and income information.

Have several hard copies and an electronic copy of your documentation (see below) ready. Also, bring a credit card with you when you look at apartments, so if you see an apartment you like, you can immediately fill out an application and pay the application fee. It speeds up the process and if you are the first person to fill out an application for the apartment, your chances of getting the apartment are much higher.

Documents required

- Letter from your employer stating position, salary and start date
- Last two pay stubs
- Last one to two years' tax returns (or proof of consistent income)
- Verification of other income
- Last one to three months' bank statements
- Names, addresses and phone numbers of previous landlords
- Two personal and two business reference letters (mostly condos and co-ops ask for this)
- Verification of other assets (real estate, securities, etc.)
- Photo identification (driver's license, passport, etc.)

Application fees (credit check, first month's rent, and security deposit)

- Rental buildings: $20 per person
- Condos: $300 - $1,000
- Co-ops: $600 - $1,500
- First month's rent
- Security deposit (equal to one month's rent)

If your credit score is not being approved for the apartments you are interested in, then consider subletting an apartment until credit can be improved (see previous section on sublets). Otherwise you might need a guarantor (see below). Some helpful information about improving credit can be found here.

If your salary level and total financial picture do not meet the landlord's requirements, you will need a co-signor, or guarantor, to guarantee the lease. Landlords prefer a family member who lives in New York, New Jersey or Connecticut. The guarantor must provide the same documentation as the renter and have a gross annual income of 80 to 100 times the monthly rent. Prepare your potential guarantor for this possibility in advance.

If you cannot meet the landlord's financial requirements and do not have a relative that can guarantee the rent, an alternative might be one of the companies that can guarantee the lease on your behalf.

Resources

Guarantor companies: Insurent, Jetty, Rhino, Obligo, The Guarantors

Signing a Lease

What is a lease?

A lease is a contract between a landlord and a tenant which contains the terms and conditions of the rental. It cannot be changed while it is in effect unless both parties agree. A party must sign the lease in order to be bound by its terms. Any changes to the lease must be signed by both parties.

All agreements made between the tenant and the landlord must be contained in the lease, as verbal agreements are not enforceable. The lease must be written in English. Read it carefully. It is written in favor of the landlord, since it is the landlord that serves the lease. If any clause in the lease is contrary to your rights as a tenant, then the clause is not enforceable by the landlord (see page 15 for links to resources regarding tenant's rights). If you request any repairs, replacement of appliances or painting of the apartment before moving in, it needs to be stated in the lease.

All monies (first month's rent, security deposit and broker's fee, if applicable) are due at lease signing. Landlords may require certified checks, but if the money is electronically transferred, confirm it is to a U.S. account. Also, you will need to bring proof of identity with you (driver's license, passport, etc.).

Check the following:

- Does the lease state the correct rent, address and landlord?
- Are all the people responsible for paying the rent listed on the lease?
- Does the lease mention all of the amenities agreed upon?
- Check the lease to find out the due date of the rent each month.
- Check to see if utilities are billed separately or are included in your monthly rent.
- Are there any special building rules? Find out if your new building is pet-friendly, has limits on guests, etc.
- What happens at the end of the lease term? Can you renew automatically? What happens if you break the lease? Can you sublet or assign (transfer) the lease?
- If you are signing a lease with a roommate, make sure both of your names are on the lease in order for both parties to have rights to the apartment.
- Check the duration or term of the rental, the conditions of occupancy, and the rights and obligations of both parties.
- If you want the landlord to repaint the apartment, have it stated in the lease.
- If you would like to be able to paint the apartment yourself, or add wallpaper, or any other permanent addition to the apartment, make sure you are allowed to do this. Otherwise the landlord will require you to return the apartment to the original state upon expiration of the lease.

What clauses should I look out for?

There are many types of lease agreements, and the type of lease presented to you will vary depending on the situation with the apartment that you are renting. Although most lease agreements are standard forms, in many instances clauses or riders may be added to the lease that supersede or alter the lease agreement in some way.

Some examples of types of leases are a "Standard Form of Lease", a "Rent Stabilized Lease Agreement" and a "Co-operative Sublease Agreement". Landlords in New York City are required to have you sign Riders to the Lease regarding window guards and lead-based paint, as well as bedbugs if there has been a report of bedbugs in the building within the last 12 months.

Additionally, the following lease provisions are void:

- Exempting landlords from liability for injuries to persons or property caused by the landlord's negligence, or that of the landlord's employees or agents.
- Waiving the tenant's right to a jury trial in any lawsuit brought by either of the parties against the other for personal injury or property damage.
- Requiring tenants to pledge their household furniture as security for rent.

When renting a house or townhouse, the lease should be explicit about who is responsible for the maintenance of the property, and who pays for any repairs (i.e. snow removal, lawn mowing, plumber, etc.).

Negotiating rent

When an apartment is not rent-regulated, a landlord is free to charge any rent agreed upon by the parties. If the apartment is subject to rent regulation, the initial rent and subsequent rent increases are set by law.

Maximum rent increases for rent-regulated apartments are set each year by the New York City Rent Guidelines Board. In addition, landlords of rent-regulated apartments may seek rent increases for certain types of building-wide major capital improvements (MCI) that benefit all tenants, such as the replacement of a boiler or the installation of new equipment.

However, rent can almost always be negotiated. In order to negotiate rent, rethink your move-in dates. The sooner you are able to move into an apartment, the less money a landlord loses on the vacancy. For more tips on negotiating rent, see page 14.

Security deposits

Virtually all leases require tenants to give their landlords a security deposit. The security deposit should be one month's rent. A landlord may use the security deposit as a reimbursement for the reasonable cost of repairs beyond normal wear and tear if the tenant damages the apartment, or as reimbursement for any unpaid rent. The landlord must return the security deposit, less any lawful deductions, to the tenant at the end of the lease or within 14 days after lease termination.

Landlords, regardless of the number of units in the building, must treat the deposits as trust funds belonging to their tenants and they may not commingle deposits with their own money. Landlords of buildings with six or more apartments must put all security deposits in New York bank accounts earning interest at the prevailing rate. Each tenant must be informed in writing of the bank's name and address and the amount of the deposit.

Landlords are entitled to collect annual administrative expenses of one percent of the deposit. All other interest earned on the deposits belongs to the tenants. Tenants must be given the option of having this interest paid to them annually, applied to rent, or paid at the end of the lease term. If the building has fewer than six apartments, a landlord who voluntarily places the security deposits in an interest-bearing bank account must also follow these rules.

If you are not a U.S. citizen, do not have credit history in the U.S., or if you pay taxes outside of the U.S., you might be asked to pay additional security at the time of lease signing (though landlords are restricted from requesting this as of June 2019). In turn, you should ask the landlord if the lease and payment of rent can be guaranteed by a third-party vendor (see above), or if you can pre-pay the rent in some manner (attorney's escrow account).

Concession agreement

If you are signing a lease for an apartment offering a concession, make sure that your agreed upon concession is written in the lease before signing.

Renter's insurance

Many landlords will require you to purchase renter's insurance as part of the lease signing process. The landlord's insurance does not cover the tenant's personal property, so a tenant should have renter's insurance. Renter's insurance policies typically cover damage and loss caused by routine weather events, fire, smoke vandalism and theft. The amount covered will depend on the amount you elect to take, so consider the replacement cost of your household goods very carefully.

Renter's insurance also includes liability protection. If someone was injured at your home and sued you, your legal expenses and any court award would be covered, generally up to a $50,000 or $100,000 limit, depending on how much coverage you elect to take.

Coverage often provides living expenses should you have to move out of your apartment if the apartment was uninhabitable due to fire, smoke, etc.

Renter's insurance is not that expensive, as a basic policy costs about $500 to $600 per year with approximately $50,000 worth of property protection. Read the policy carefully so you fully understand what is covered.

Following are a few insurance companies that provide renter's insurance. Prices vary from company to company, so it is best to compare policies and prices carefully.

- Allstate
- Chubb
- Hartford
- Liberty Mutual Group
- Travelers

Home insurance is a voluntary benefit option for Columbia benefit-eligible employees.

Signing a sublet agreement

Some things you can do to ensure you are moving into a legal sublet:

- Ask to see a copy of the current lease.
- Ask to see the identification of the person who is listed as the tenant on the lease, which should be the same person who is trying to sublet the apartment.
- Request to see the landlord's written permission.
- Google the tenant's and landlord's names. You never know what might show up!

Resources

Negotiating Rent in NYC
Insurance Information Institute

Moving into Your Apartment

Finding movers

Be aware that many movers will require 1-7 days for pickup of your belongings and 1-7 days for drop-off. So, schedule your move as far in advance as possible. Cross-country or moves further from New York City are best scheduled at least one month in advance.

Walk-ups vs elevator buildings

Take note of whether the apartment you're moving into is a walk-up or elevator building. Most older buildings in NYC are walk-ups. Be mindful of the amount of space you have to transport your items as well as the amount of support you will need to carry your belongings.

Some movers may charge an additional fee for each flight of stairs they have to walk up.

Notifying apartment of move in date

The landlord will require advance notice to schedule a move-in of your belongings. In most buildings, move-ins are scheduled from Monday through Friday, 9:00am-5:00pm.

Move-in day

On move-in day, or before, take photos of the apartment before your furniture and boxes have arrived, particularly of any areas that might have existing damage (chips in kitchen counter, water stains on the wood floor, etc.). You can request a walk-through of the apartment with the landlord or a landlord's representative prior to move-in in order to assess the condition of the apartment. Take notes.

If your apartment offers a loading zone, ask if you're able to use it for your move-in day. Loading zones often are equipped with wider doors, moving carts, and other helpful tools for transporting things.

- When scheduling your move in, your superintendent will likely suggest you use the building's loading zone.
- If your building does not have a loading zone and you've gotten movers, the movers may charge an additional fee for not having direct access into the building.

Tip the building superintendent when you first move in as this will likely guarantee better service in the future.

Resources

Office of Work/Life's Moving Guide

Best Moving Companies in NYC 2026: A Guide Based on Performance, Reviews, and Product Offerings

Living in Your Apartment

Rental furniture

If you need to furnish your home quickly, Columbia University students, staff, and faculty will be eligible to receive a $50 VISA gift card for any new Student Package lease of 6 months or longer from Cort Furniture Rental. Follow this link for more information.

- Other furniture options are listed in the Resources section at the end of this section.

Apartment sharing

It is unlawful for a landlord to restrict occupancy of an apartment to the tenant named in the lease or to the tenant's immediate family. When the lease names only one tenant, that tenant may share the apartment with immediate family, one additional occupant and the occupant's dependent children, provided that it is the tenant's primary residence.

A tenant must inform the landlord of the name of any occupant within 30 days after the occupant has moved into the apartment or within 30 days of a landlord's request for this information. If the tenant named in the lease moves out, the remaining occupant has no right to continue in occupancy without the landlord's express consent. Landlords may limit the total number of people living in an apartment to comply with legal overcrowding standards.

Subletting

Tenants with leases who live in buildings with four or more apartments have the right to sublet their apartments with the landlord's advance consent. If the landlord consents to the sublet, the tenant remains liable to the landlord for the obligations of the lease, including all future rent.

For information about subletting laws, check the New York City Rent Guidelines Board.

If you plan to sublet to someone that you do not know, it is a good idea to do some vetting. Ask for employment verification, as well as for official identification (passport, driver's license, etc.). Search their name on the internet and see what comes up.

If you are preparing your apartment to sublet:

- Remove any valuables
- Keep your apartment clean
- Make a list of contact information
- Pre-pay anything you are responsible for while you are gone (i.e. electric bill, cable bill, etc.)
- Provide any helpful information about the apartment, building and neighborhood
- Ask for a security deposit

Maintenance

In most buildings, when any repair or maintenance work needs to be done, it is the superintendent that will either do the repair or arrange to have it done. The superintendent runs the building, and all other personnel that work in the building usually report to them.

Making changes

If you would like to paint the walls a different color, or make any other changes to the apartment, have your landlord approve the change in writing before you do anything. If you don't get your landlord's approval, you might have trouble getting all or part of your security deposit back after you move-out.

Lease renewal

Unless you have a rent-regulated apartment, the landlord does not have to renew the lease. If you would like to renew your lease, but would like to negotiate the rent increase (or non-increase), then you can approach the landlord with the following points:

- Start the conversation as far in advance as possible. Reach out about 60–90 days before renewal.
- If you have paid your rent on time, point this out to the landlord. On-time payments, a good track record, and wanting to stay can make a landlord more flexible.
- Understand the market. Show what similar apartments are currently renting for, in your building and in the area in similar buildings, and explain how you arrived at your number.
- Smaller landlords might be more willing to negotiate.
- Vacancies cost landlords money. They lose rent while they paint, repair and show the apartment – along with the cost of repairs and potential broker’s fees.
- A new tenant might be noisy or not pay the rent on time.
- Make a specific counteroffer. Rather than saying “Can you do better?”, give them a number. Ideally, anchor somewhat below the maximum you’re actually willing to pay so there’s room to negotiate.
- Figure out how much it will cost you to move (movers, broker’s fees, etc.) and consider this to be the minimum amount you can compromise.
- Negotiate beyond rent. If the rent won’t move, ask about concessions, repairs/upgrades, utilities, or a longer lease. Asking for a two-year lease will lock-in the rent.

Tenants should be familiar with rent increase laws, so they are not charged more rent by their landlords than is legally allowable. There are three major categories of apartments in NYC: market-rate or non-regulated apartments, rent-stabilized apartments, rent-controlled apartments, and subsidized apartments. Each one of these apartment types has its own set of rent increase laws and guidelines.

Market-rate or non-regulated apartments:

There is no limitation on the allowable rent chargeable by landlords and no limit on how much landlords are permitted to increase the rent from lease to lease. The new rent must be agreed upon between the landlord and tenant. If a rent increase is not affordable the tenant’s options are to negotiate a smaller increase, if possible, or to move out.

Rent-stabilized and Rent-controlled apartments:

The Rent Guidelines Board (RGB) and State of New York Division of Housing Community Renewal (DHCR) regulate increases for rent-stabilized and rent-controlled apartments. For rent-controlled apartments, landlords must file for rent increases with the DHCR and obtain a rent increase order.

Landlords are not allowed to increase the rent mid-lease, except if landlords of rent-stabilized or rent-controlled apartments apply for and are granted Major Capital Improvement (MCI) increases on their properties. Once obtained, the MCI can become effective at any time. An MCI usually refers to a building wide improvement such as a new roof, or new windows.

Resources

Negotiating rent

How to Negotiate Your NYC Rent Renewal \(Scripts That Actually Work\)

7 Ways to Negotiate a Smaller Rent Increase at Lease Renewal Time

6 Tips To Negotiate Your Rent

Furniture – New

CB2

IKEA

West Elm

West | Out East

Unique & Affordable Furniture Sets

Furniture – Used

AptDeco

Furnish Green

Housing Works

The 7 Best Flea Markets in New York City

Tenant's rights

Housing Court Answers

The Rent Guidelines Board

The New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal

NYC Department of Housing Preservation and Development

Law Help

Tenants & Homeowners | New York Attorney General

Metropolitan Council on Housing

Moving out of Your Apartment

Getting security deposit back

Read your lease. It usually states in the lease specific guidelines by the landlord regarding the return of the security deposit. In New York State, the landlord has up to 14 days after lease termination to return the security deposit.

To make sure you receive your full security deposit, take photos of the apartment at move-out. Besides normal wear and tear, the apartment should not have any other damage than what was already present when you moved-in.

Though the apartment needs to be “broom swept” clean, it is best to either clean the apartment thoroughly yourself or hire a cleaning service to do so. This helps to prevent the possibility of the landlord attempting to retain some of your security deposit to cover cleaning costs.

Find out where you need to return the keys and do so on the day you move-out. Have the landlord’s agent confirm in writing that he/she received the keys.

If your landlord does not return the security deposit by the prescribed time, then you will need to petition your landlord in Small Claims Court.

Breaking the lease

A lease is a binding contract. If either party violates the lease, the offending party is subject to varying penalties under the law. There are certain situations in which a tenant can “break” a lease and still retain the security deposit. This depends on the circumstances regarding the termination of the lease, how quickly the landlord is able to find a new tenant for the apartment, and whether any damage was done beyond reasonable wear and tear to the property during the tenant’s occupancy.

If a tenant has a lease for an apartment that has become uninhabitable, as defined by law, and the tenant can no longer live in the apartment, the tenant is said to be a victim of constructive eviction. Constructive eviction permits the tenant to break the lease and retain the security deposit. An example of this would be a flood or a fire.

Breaking the lease for other reasons, not because the property has become uninhabitable or the landlord has done anything wrong, generally does not entitle the tenant to a return of the security deposit and would in fact subject the tenant to varying legal penalties for violating the contract.

If the landlord is able to immediately find another tenant to rent the apartment after a tenant breaks the lease and moves out, the landlord would have no grounds for keeping the security deposit paid by the original tenant. If the landlord, despite searching, is not able to find another tenant to rent the property, the landlord would be within rights to sue the tenant for the remaining rent owed in accordance with the lease.

If a tenant breaks the lease and moves out but leaves the rented residence damaged beyond what would be considered reasonable wear and tear, the tenant might not be able to retain the security deposit. The landlord would use the security deposit to repair the damages caused by the tenant. In order to not be wrongfully accused of damaging the apartment beyond reasonable wear and tear, tenants should carefully survey the property with the landlord and record the condition of the property with photographs prior to move-in.

If a tenant knows when signing the lease, or the lease renewal, that they might need to vacate the apartment before the lease terminates, the tenant can request a “diplomatic clause” be added to the lease.

- Usually landlords will not agree to add a diplomatic clause during the first 12 months of a lease but may agree to add it for subsequent lease renewals or, if it is a 24-month lease, it can be implemented after the first 12 months of the lease.
- An example of a diplomatic clause is: “The tenant has the option to terminate the lease with sixty (60) days written notice to the landlord.”

Buying a house

Perhaps you’re considering purchasing a home as your next step. As you explore whether buying is right for you, there are a number of factors to consider. We encourage you to schedule a consultation through our Housing Information and Referral Service to help you navigate the process.

When searching for a real estate broker, review prospective brokers’ online profiles and professional backgrounds. Consider their experience with the neighborhoods or types of properties you’re interested in, and look for evidence of relevant local expertise. Our Housing Information and Referral Service can also provide referrals to real estate brokers and attorneys. The service is available to all faculty, including faculty being recruited to the University, as well as all other Columbia University employees.

Columbia faculty and staff can also connect with mortgage lenders through our Affinity Mortgage Lending Program. Each lender has specific benefits for the Columbia community as part of the program, which they will be able to speak to you about further when you reach out.

Finding another apartment

If you are moving out and looking to lease elsewhere, you know what to do. Refer to the beginning of this guide for a smooth transition into your next home. Best of luck!

Resources

Rental listings and data

StreetEasy

Zillow

Zumper

Sales listings and data

Brick Underground

Corcoran

Douglas Elliman