Living in Tenafly and Working at Columbia

Tenafly is a great community to live in and commute to Columbia.

Commuting by Car:

- Traffic during rush hour can be heavy getting across the GW Bridge, however once in Manhattan it is a quick drive to the Morningside, Manhattanville and CUIMC campuses.

Commuting by Pubic Transit:

- For fewer transfers take the NJ Transit 166 bus to Time Square and get on the #1 subway. This can take 90 minutes as the 166 bus goes through the Lincoln Tunnel.
- Alternatively, you can take the 166 bus to the 178 bus which takes you across the GW Bridge.
- Another option is Park & Ride in order to take a bus across the GW Bridge. Either one of the NJ Transit busses or a Columbia shuttle bus that originates in Ft. Lee are options. Travel time: +/-30 minutes.

History

Tenafly is a historic town. The name Tenafly comes from the early Dutch immigrants who founded the town in the 17th century. The name Tenafly comes from the Dutch phrase "Tiene Vly" meaning "Ten Swamps". During the 18th and 19th centuries, most of Tenafly's land was cultivated and turned into farmland. In 1872, Tenafly officially became part of the Palisades Township and 12 years later it became its own borough. In the 1860's, New York architect Daniel Topping Atwood designed many significant homes and buildings including the historic railroad station.

During the revolutionary war, British and Hessian Soldiers invaded New Jersey by crossing the Hudson River. They marched through Tenafly on their way to Fort Lee. You can find a placard of their route on Tenafly Road.

Tenafly is also home to the "leading intellectual force in the emancipation of American Women."

Elizabeth Cady Stanton along with Susan B. Anthony attempted to vote in the Tenafly polls in 1880. Stanton also co-authored the first three volumes of the History of Woman Suffrage with Susan B. Anthony and Matilda Joslyn Gage. Elizabeth Cady Stanton's home, where she frequently met with Susan B. Anthony, is a privately-owned home in Tenafly today.
